

The Bloomfield Record.

New Jersey Justice.

One of the most interesting cases ever brought before the Essex County Court was tried by Judge Deane on Saturday last, being that of Annie Sweeney vs. Henry T. Knox. It was a suit to recover damages to a heavy amount for an atrocious assault committed by the defendant while the complainant was employed by him as a domestic. The case possessed a peculiar local interest from the fact that the plaintiff is a resident of Bloomfield and now engaged in the family of one of our residents, and her counsel being Mr. Wm. D. Foulke, also of this village. A very favorable impression was made by the able and successful manner in which he conducted his client's case.

State Senator Stone appeared as counsel for Knox, whose defense was a sweeping denial, by himself and wife, of the alleged inhuman treatment. Mr. Foulke delivered the opening address to the jury. In an eloquent and forcible manner he related the story of his client's sufferings, which seemed almost too terrible to be real. But after the girl had told her own story and the counsel for the defense had failed completely to make the least break in the cross-examination, all present were satisfied that the counsel in his opening had really failed to color the story high enough. Miss Sweeney testified that she came to this country in April, 1873, and landed in Philadelphia. She had not a friend or acquaintance in the country. Consequently she sought an intelligence office to get employment. She met the defendant in this office, and he employed her to go with him to his house in Burlington county in this state and become a servant in his family. All went well until Saturday, the 19th, when the defendant and his wife went to Philadelphia. Before going, Mrs. Knox brought a young chicken into the house and told plaintiff to take care of it. While the girl was doing her housework a young dog killed the chicken. When the defendant and wife returned Mrs. Knox inquired for the chicken. Plaintiff replied that a dog killed it. Mrs. Knox insisted that the girl had killed it, and then struck her several times on the face, then calling her husband to come to her aid, telling him that the plaintiff had given her sauce. Defendant came up to her and struck her with a boot-jack, knocking her down, and then kicking her in a brutal manner with his boots. She yelled murder, and begged the man to spare her life, but he struck her again and again. The girl then appealed for protection to the woman; but, instead of granting it, she aided her husband in the assault.

Other flagrant acts of cruelty were sworn to in detail, making a most heart-rending exhibition of brutality on the part of Knox and his wife. On one occasion, the girl, having been unable to sleep, arose very early and went down stairs to build a fire. She was in such a hurry, fearing to be late, and that then Knox would beat her again, that she did not stop to say her prayers before leaving her room. When the fire was started she thought that as she had no friend but God to whom she could appeal for protection she resolved to kneel down by the stove and supplicate Him to protect her in this terrible suffering and deliver her from these wicked people. While she was on her knees, praying, Mr. Knox came up quickly behind her and caught her by the neck, kicked her, and with a candle he would have none of her Catholic prayers in his house. Then she endeavored to leave the place, intending to go back to Philadelphia, but they prevented her from going. At last she got off and succeeded in reaching New York.

When Knox was placed upon the stand his testimony was objected to upon the ground that he was an atheist. Judge Deane overruled the objection and Knox was sworn in the usual way, and denied the girl's story. Upon his cross-examination, the first question asked him was, "Mr. Knox, do you believe in a God?" His answer was "yes."

"Is your God an intelligent God?" "Yes."

"Have you any affirmative belief that your God will reward you in a future world for acts of virtue, and punish you for the practice of vice?"

"No, that is all nonsense; no one knows anything about a future world." He was then asked if he believed in the Bible, and he answered emphatically "no," and gave the same answer when he was asked if he believed in Christ as a Redeemer, and denied that the Bible was the word of God.

At this point the counsel for the plaintiff withdrew their objection to the defense in regard to his competency as a witness, saying that after the manner in which he conducted himself upon the stand, the jury were perfectly satisfied to take the testimony of the plaintiff as a competent witness. Mr. Knox as a competent witness. Mr. Stone objected to this course, and claimed that the Court must decide whether or not the defendant was a competent witness. Judge Deane ruled that the plaintiff having withdrawn their objection, the Court had nothing to rule upon.

Mrs. Knox was then called and when she was sworn she cried so hard that it was some time before they could hear what she said, but as soon as she had been questioned awhile on cross-examination, she acquired the use of her tongue and talked in such a voluble manner that neither Court nor lawyers could stop her. She contradicted herself in an important particular.

Judge Deane, after commenting upon the testimony, said that it was utterly impossible for the jury to reconcile the different statements in the testimony, it being a complete denial upon the part of the defendant and his wife to the testimony of the plaintiff; that they must decide which story they will believe; the girl, Mr. and Mrs. Knox, either one or the other of them must have knowingly, wilfully and deliberately sworn to a lie, and in reaching your decision you must judge somewhat from the circumstances in the case, the conduct of the witnesses of the defendant in regard to his nonbelief in a future state of punishment or reward.

The jury were out about five minutes, when they came in with a verdict for the plaintiff of $2,500.

The Wonders of New Guinea.

An English traveler, named Captain Lawson, has just published in London a wonderful narrative of his journeyings on the island of Papua or New Guinea. He claims to have discovered, on this hitherto unexplored region, a mountain upwards of 32,000 feet in height. This exceeds the highest peak of the Himalayas by 3000 feet. Captain Lawson states that with one attendant he made a partial ascent of this mountain, reaching an altitude hitherto unparalleled in the annals of mountaineering. At the height of fifteen thousand feet, nothing was visible but snow of the most dazzling whiteness. Every peak and crag was covered with it, and it hung over the edges of the cliffs in long fleecy masses. Their eyes were affected by the glare, and they felt themselves growing more and more lethargic.

"At length blood began to flow from nostrils and ears," says Capt. Lawson, "and my head began to swim in a dizzying manner. I saw that our only chance of preserving life was to retreat without delay; for we were in a perilous plight. Our lips and gums and the skin of our hands and faces were cracked and bleeding, and our eyes were bloodshot and swollen to an alarming extent. The thermometer had sunk to twenty-two degrees below the freezing point, and the air was so rarefied that we were gasping rather than breathing. Our staves fell from our grasp, and we could not pick them up again, so hoarse were our voices and hands. It was now one o'clock, and the greatest elevation we had attained was 25,314 feet."

They then turned back, descended to the limit of the snow in three hours, and arrived at their camp at the base of the mountain about half past seven in the evening. Thus, in fifteen hours and a half, they had ascended an absolute height of 23,000 feet, to an elevation greater than any ever before attained by man upon the surface of the earth, although balloonists have occasionally gone higher.

Sickness prevails everywhere, and everybody complains of some disease during their life. When sick the object is to get well, now we say plainly that no person in this world that is suffering with Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint and its effects, such as Indigestion, Constipation, Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Heartburn, Palpitation of the Heart, Depressed Spirits, Bilelessness, &c., can take GREEN'S SALT-PILL without getting well and fast. If you doubt this, go to G. R. Davis, Druggist, and get a Sample Bottle for 10 cents and try it. Regular size 75 cents. Two doses will relieve you.
